The German Blitzkrieg Campaign in Poland. A history of the 1939 campaign by Osprey in which the Allies fought to stem the German advance. The campaign, it was claimed, had inflicted 100,000 casualties on the Wehrmacht on a front about a third the size of the Western Front's, and, along with the invasion of France in May 1940, the campaign took more German lives and more Russian lives in World War II than was lost on any other front. The German air forces were forced to cease operations around mid-June and only resumed within weeks of the last strategic bombing. The Allied offensives took place in severe weather and were hampered by storms, poor flying weather and poor roads and rail. 46,500,000 men were involved in the campaign. In the south, however, virtually the whole campaign took place on the western wing (south of Pomerania), reaching France along the Westwall, as well as across the Falaise Gap at F 04aeff104c
